- 2x 10mm safety eyes

If you're confused about how to read my patterns check out the FAQ. There's also a link to a description of a variety of stitches for beginners :)

I looked for a good colour for Bulbasaur for a while, and ended up finding a great turquoise colour in the 4 seasons Marvel brand, which is available at Spotlight in Australia. Cascade Superwash has an almost exact colour match with their Duck Egg Blue shade.

- (stuff the bulb at this point)
10. [ dec ]x 6 (6)
  11. [ inc, sc ]x 3 (9)

Leave a long tail and finish off.

When stuffing the bulb make sure that it's not stuffed too much, and that the base can be flattened. You should be able to easily pinch it and have it stay flat, like the picture above.

Now we're going to take the tail and use it to shape the bulb. What you want to achieve is to see a flower-like shape from above with 6 even sections. Use the tail, and take it from the top of the bulb to the bottom, pulling it very tight so that it makes a dent in the bulb (picture on the right above). Then do the same thing, going back up from the bottom of the bulb to the top on the opposite side. Do this until you have 6 even sections and it has a flower-like outline when placed flat.

That's all of the crocheting done! Stuff the head, legs and body. I find the ears and arms don't really need stuffing (and we've already done the bulb). After they're stuffed I like to use pins to hold them in place before sewing them on. It makes it easier to gauge placement.

Then I just sew them on! I usually find this order easiest: legs, arms, head, ears, bulb. I find it easier to place the bulb and ears evenly after the rest of the body has been put together.

Last thing left to do are the small marks on his arms and face. Cut out 5 weird oval-like shapes out of a dark turquoise felt. The one I've used is a bit greener than it should be because I couldn't find anything closer to the colour I wanted. You could also stitch the markings on using yarn. Glue them in place and then you're done!

Done!
